D. Course development

- development and implementation of an introductory syntax course 'Principles and Parameters' for the ATW-course Syntax 2, including text book.
- development and implementation of a course 'Introduction into the Minimalist Program' for ATW-course Syntax 3, including reader.
- development and implementation of a seminar 'Structure of a non-Indo-european language' with varying object languages (Tagalog, Mandarin Chinese, Swahili, Quechua, Turkish)
- development and implementation of a faculty wide seminar 'Descriptive en historical linguistics: language contact and language variation' (jointly with R. Probst), a shorter version of which was later included in the minor Language and Society.
- development and implementation of a bachelor course 'Language variation and change'
- reorganisation of the Department of Linguistics introductory syntax courses, developing a theory-neutral introductory syntax course, also taken by students of Computational Humanities and adopted in the BA-program of the Departments of Dutch, Frisian, and Communication Studies, including textbook, multimedia presentation and exercises, and an introductory theoretical course (Nieuwe ontwikkelingen in de syntaxis)
- design, development and implementation of a minor Models of grammar treating current linguistic theory for non-linguistics students.
- supervision of design and coordination of a faculty wide minor Linguistics
- development and implementation of a new masters level introduction in syntax for research master students
- development and implementation of an introductory syntax course for non-specialist graduate students, for use in the LOT Summer Schools
